THE coming week will be one of constant action for official hostesses returning here for the Congressional season and for the debutantes to whom December properly belongs. The month will be ushered in by the presentation of the most important bud of the season, the daughter of the President and Mrs. Taft, who will make her formal debut to society on Thursday afternoon in the White House, the third of a succession of White House buds, one in each of the three last administrations. Miss Alice Roosevelt, now Mrs. Longworth, was the first, and was presented in her eighteenth year, during the first administration of her father. Her young sister Ethel was the next, and was introduced during her father's second administration, and now society is reveling in its splendid luck to have a third one to lead the social affairs of the younger set in society.

Mrs. Taft has followed strictly the custom of the American mother in presenting her daughter at an afternoon reception, or tea, which is the more feminine name for the function. This will be followed after a few weeks with a dance given by Mrs. Taft for her daughter, which adds such flavor to a Washington season. Miss Taft's pre-debut entertainments have been numerous already, and from this week on it will be difficult to arrange any dates with her. Almost every day and evening is filled for two months ahead. Last week luncheons were frequent. Miss Nagel, daughter of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, had a party on her for her and her house party of schoolmates, and a few days before that Miss Alshire, one of her childhood friends in the Philippines, entertained her at luncheon.

To-morrow Fort Myer will have the President's daughter as its special guest, when the Misses Garrard, daughters of the commanding officer at the fort, will entertain at tea for her. The military portion of Washington society is particularly awake to the entertaining of Miss Taft out of compliment to the years the President was at its head as Secretary of War, and, going further back, when he was governor of the Philippines. It was during her long stay in the Philippines that she made so many close friends among the army children, now grown to young manhood and womanhood, and many of whom are now living in Washington.

The opening of the official season will see a vacancy again in the line of Cabinet women at the White House functions, to say nothing of the many other duties throughout the season. This will be the Secretary of War and Mrs. Dickinson, whose son, J. Overton, died on Thanksgiving Day. Mrs. Dickinson has made an important place for herself in official society in the short space of time she has been in it, and sincere sympathy has been extended from all sides. The missing ones last year in this little circle are again taking up their social duties, the Secretary of State and Mrs. Knox and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and Mrs. Nagel, all of whom went into mourning at the beginning of last season, just as Secretary and Mrs. Dickinson have on the eve of the opening of this one.

Bowyer, superintendent of the Naval Academy, and Mrs. Bowyer, to Ensign Douglas Le Gate Howard, son of Rear Admiral Thomas B. Howard, U. S. N.
